

The 100 Most Powerful Women in Art: Part Three

Doreen Remen: Cofounder of the Art Production Fund alongside Yvonne Force Villareal, which helps artists complete difficult-to-produce artworks. Photo: Patrick McMullan

Welcome to Part Three of artnet News' list of powerful women in the art world. There are so many ways to exercise influence and power in the art world but one thing is abundantly clear: Women play a leading role. artnet News continues its yearlong celebration of women in the art world with "The 100 Most Powerful Women in Art." Our list, which is divided into three parts, is arranged alphabetically to avoid the perception of a ranking: We are celebrating the achievements of women in the art world, period.

The list was developed in consultation with art world denizens throughout Europe, Asia, and the United States. They helped us compile a working list of the most powerful women in the art business. From the initial list of more than 300 names, the editors at artnet News chose 100. If you missed the first two parts of the list, "The 100 Most Powerful Women in Art: Part One" and "The 100 Most Powerful Women In Art: Part Two," we invite you to take a look and see who's who. Read the third and final section of our list, below, to find out who is playing at the top of her game.