Art Production Fund and Kiehl’s Since 1851 Present “Everything” by Hanna Liden
On view from July 2015 in Hudson River Park and Ruth Wittenberg Plaza

(New York, NY) Art Production Fund and Kiehl’s Since 1851 are pleased to present Hanna Liden’s Everything, a two part public art installation in Hudson River Park (July 20 – October 20, 2015) and Ruth Wittenberg Plaza (July 20 – August 24, 2015).

Everything presents a much beloved New York staple – the bagel – in an unexpected context. The project places large-scale carved versions of the food, both individually and in stacks as makeshift vases, in bustling public spaces, engaging the city’s thousands of workers, commuters, residents and visitors.

Liden’s work spans a variety of media. In her photography, she has frequently sourced objects from her neighborhood bodega, her studio, or her closet to form still lives. This practice of makeshift composition has naturally evolved into a dynamic sculptural practice, in which Liden utilizes the casting process to seamlessly replicate and modify these familiar objects.

Everything is a natural extension of the artist’s approach to capturing isolated moments within the lives of mass-produced and universally accessible objects. The project also underscores the profound influence that living in New York City has had on the artist. Liden, whose work is always rich with highly personal associations, had her first bagel only upon arriving in New York in 1998 when she moved straight into the Chelsea Hotel, and views the food as “a great icon of urban living.” For the artist, “the bagel - a circle with no beginning and no end – is evocative of the eternal cycle of city life. The black spray paint is a romantic tribute to the darkness and grime, which are essential and beautiful characteristics of our city.” Liden embraces the references to Oldenburg’s Pop exaggerations and Brancusi’s Modernist columns but claims her territory with the layer of goth blackness transforming the pure into a the punk.

Hudson River Park and Ruth Wittenberg Plaza (6th Avenue and Christopher Street) are particularly fitting locations since they serve as recreational and business spaces for diverse cultures of New York. “Everything is a playful nod to the surprising beauty of everyday objects, and to the dynamic nature of New York City’s multiculturalism,” said Art Production Fund Co-Founders Doreen Remen and Yvonne Force Villareal, “We are ecstatic to make Hanna Liden’s work accessible to the public with this project.”

“It’s so exciting to celebrate Kiehl’s longstanding commitment to the arts by partnering with Art Production Fund to bring Hanna Liden’s remarkable installation to life, in our hometown. The three works of art represent all that New York means to her, and the ingredients and anti-aging benefits of our new Super Multi-Corrective Cream with SPF 30 represent such a multi-functional approach to skincare. It’s an honor to support this artistic endeavor as we launch our new product,” Chris Salgado, President, Kiehl’s USA.

Friends of Hudson River Park board member, Stacey Goergen, who is organizing the Park’s first Art Committee, says: “We are delighted to partner with Art Production Fund on Hanna Liden's playful, yet meaningful, installation. As Friends of Hudson River Park develops a plan for a more comprehensive and sustainable art program, we hope to continue collaborating with artists and organizations to bring relevant and vibrant programming to our visitors.”

“Hanna Liden’s whimsical, yet thoughtful, installation Everything is the perfect installation to take up residence in Hudson River Park during our “Summer of Fun,” said Madelyn Wils, CEO & President of Hudson River Park Trust. “Framed by the natural beauty of the Hudson River and the iconic Christopher Street Fountain, these delightful pieces remind us to appreciate even the simplest everyday objects in our lives, as well as the beautiful backdrop in which they will be seen. We look forward to everyone stopping by to enjoy Everything this summer.”

Hudson River Park is the longest riverfront park in the United States. This free, urban recreational space celebrates the diverse cultures and neighborhoods along its shores through a myriad of year-round events and art installations. The Park plays a critical role...
