APF LAB is pleased to present a selection of Drawings for Sculptures of Buildings, 2006-2010

The series Drawings for Sculptures of Buildings began in 2006 when Vanderlip was cutting silvered mylar into ellipses while making studies for her Truckhead sculptures.

During the last twenty years she has often been inspired by her father—a modernist architect who died in 1994— as a source for her work. His utilitarian approach to architecture, his sense of design, and his hands-on acumen profoundly influenced her decision to practice sculpture. As a child she often helped him in his woodshop and later in her 20's, she apprenticed for him as a draftsman in his firm.

For this series, she began redrawing some of his original architectural drawings, plans and elevations from the 1960's and 70's, changed their scale, and using silvered mylar she collaged them to make the buildings take form. As soon as she completed the very first collage, she realized these homages to her father, in fact, related to many of her previous works and were ideal plans for future sculptures. The process of making these drawings allows Vanderlip to connect to her father by measuring, studying, multiplying and redrawing the lines he once drew. APF LAB will present #'s 44-47 from the series.

Vanderlip remains entirely intrigued by what occurs inside these drawings. We inhabit these drawings (buildings) with our own reflection at the same time we inhabit the gallery space. How can we see into and be in a space that physically doesn't exist? Unlike a mirror, the silvered mylar renders our reflection ambiguous. Moreover, when directly lit, the mylar displaces the light bouncing it back out, onto the floor, the wall or the viewer. This creates another visage that doesn't physically exist in space yet it is present, kinetic, and three-dimensional.

Sarah Vanderlip was born in Philadelphia and lives and works in Los Angeles. After receiving her M.F.A. in Sculpture from Yale, Vanderlip lived in New York for over a decade. She participated in numerous exhibitions, lectures, benefits, and collaborative projects in the city, the country and abroad. In 2000, Vanderlip began teaching Undergraduate and Graduate Sculpture at UCLA where she taught for four years. Now based in Los Angeles, Vanderlip is an Associate Professor of Art at California State University, Bakersfield. She served as Director of the CSUB gallery from 2003–2005. Some of her own recent exhibitions and projects include a permanent installation at the High Desert Test Site, a 2006 solo museum show at the L.A.C Lieu Arte Contemporain in Sigean, France, and a 2007 solo show at Galerie Jacques Girard in Toulouse, France. In 2008 Vanderlip received a University Research Council award and had her first solo show in Los Angeles at Sandroni Rey's Container. In 2009-2010, she participated in Shadows and Reflected Color for Sale at Shoshana Wayne Gallery and is currently working on a forthcoming show in Toulouse this fall.
